Financial Literacy, Built for the School Day

A story-based curriculum for students ages 12–18: what it includes, what to verify on your campus, and what it costs.

> Adding financial literacy means fitting it into a full master schedule, protecting teacher time and morale, planning for substitute days, explaining it to families, documenting coverage, and justifying the cost to the district business office. This brief is organized around those decisions.

DECISION CRITERIA FOR YOUR CAMPUS

CAMPUS REALITY	WHAT TO REVIEW BEFORE DECIDING
Teacher workload and morale	Teachers review lesson support and estimate prep per lesson.
Substitute coverage	Review Sub Day, a today-only lesson link for a substitute.
Master schedule fit	Choose a course or block for two 15-book series, Series 1 first.
Parent communication	Use the series structure and standards map to explain the course.
Campus accountability	Review assessment materials and the Texas standards map.
Budget and district approval	$2,499 per school per year, plus tax. Request a quote for the business office.
Simple, low-risk rollout	Pilot with one teacher or team; confirm access and data handling first.

WHAT STUDENTS READ

Stories that put financial choices in context. Students follow characters through money decisions and their results; the stories add context, not measured outcomes.

REVIEW THE STANDARDS EVIDENCE

The Texas standards map at mntyedu.com/state-standards shows each standard, with book references, as:

Fully covered
Addressed directly, with book references.

Partially covered
Addressed in part; plan to supplement.

Not covered
Outside the curriculum's current scope.
